

APS Membership: Benefits for the Psychologist

As American Pain Society (APS) members, psychologists gain the unique opportunity to network with other professionals approaching the science of pain from many different angles. This multidisciplinary collaboration between psychologists, nurses, doctors, pharmacists, dentists, and other clinicians and scientists benefits your professional development, your colleagues, and people in pain.

APS membership provides you with

- the most comprehensive, evidence-based pain science, research, and clinical resources
- a psychosocial shared interest group (SIG), an interdisciplinary group of clinicians and researchers interested in psychosocial aspects of pain, including cognitive, emotional, social, and behavioral domains
- membership in a national organization with the largest concentration of psychologists in the country
- sessions at the APS Annual Scientific Meeting where you will learn about and receive workshop-based training in the latest developments in psychosocial interventions for chronic pain patients
- opportunities to contribute to some of the most widely respected and accepted guidelines regarding pain management
- a monthly subscription to The Journal of Pain, the second highest ranked pain journal in the world
- a voice in advocacy efforts regarding standards and quality of care.

Belonging to a multidisciplinary professional association will greatly complement your professional development through

- promotion for the role of psychologists in pain-related issues such as screening for and preventing opioid misuse and abuse
- learning and collaboration opportunities with the best and brightest researchers and clinicians in the country
- an expanded and diverse network of peers, leading the advancement of pain relief and management
- opportunity to obtain up to 15 contact hours of CE credit at the Annual Scientific Meeting

Only together can we improve the relief of pain.
